

Greetings from the Dean

From the Graduate School at the University of Georgia, I welcome you and thank you for your interest. Our motto, “to teach, to serve, and to inquire into the nature of things,” is particularly appropriate now, as you delve into the possibilities that can be realized from graduate education. As the Graduate School celebrates its centennial year, I invite you to explore the opportunities here, as they are limitless. From dedicated faculty members to world-class resources, the environment at UGA offers a graduate educational experience that will foster your intellectual growth. Our booklet gives you an overview of our graduate programs, as well as some highlights of the University and the Athens community. I hope it will offer useful information for your decision-making process. Graduate education is about the transformation of individuals, a transformation in which you find your voice and passions, learn to think independently and critically, and create new knowledge. Thank you for considering the Graduate School at the University of Georgia. I wish you much success as you begin your journey of inquiry and exploration.

Best wishes and warm regards,

Maureen Grasso, Ph.D.
Dean of the Graduate School
